"Exploration of the Role of Industry in Work-Based Learning to Support an Independent Learning Curriculum"

Abstract

Vocational education is a program that aims to prepare graduates to be ready to work. Efforts to align competencies to realize vocational education continue to be carried out, one of which is by implementing work-based learning. This study aims to explore the role of industry in work-based learning. The research method used is quantitative. The data collection method uses research instruments consisting of five aspects of competence. Data analysis uses descriptive data from the Likert scale to be further categorized. The results of the study show that the role of industry in work-based learning is classified as good
